

Americans are sick and tired of being sick and tired

68%

of employed Americans admit to working while sick because they can't afford to take a sick day

58%

of employed Americans are afraid to call out of work for fear of being reprimanded by their employer

Black and Latina women are 10% more likely to agree with this statement.

For those surveyed who can work from home, 68%

said they feel obligated to push through and work while sick because they feel like a sick day is only warranted if they have COVID-19

63%

of respondents feel guilty for taking a sick day because it places a burden on their co-workers

64% said taking time off is too much of a financial burden

Black women are 14% more likely and Latina women are 8% more likely.